Academic Misconduct

Academic misconduct includes cheating, re-using one's work from a different class, getting help from others (unless the project is considered "group work"), plagiarism, and others. It also includes helping another to do one of those activities.

1. "Cheating" is the possession or use of information, notes, study aids or other devices (including cell phones, tablets, and computers) during academic work, or communicating with another person during academic work. Common examples of cheating include copying from another student's test/quiz, finding out the answers to a test/quiz in advance, copying from another student's work/test/quiz, and turning in the same work in more than one class without the teacher's permission.
2. "Plagiarism" means turning in someone else's work as your own work without giving credit. Plagiarism includes, but is not limited to: using another person's words, phrasing, ideas, sentence structure, information or any other way of expression and presenting it as one's own work, without giving credit to the other person (using a citation).
